

What is your favorite thing about fall?

39 responses

What does Reconciliation mean to you (in your personal life) and your work?

History

Making space for Indigenous voices.

It reminds me that I am leaving in a land that belongs to First Nations People.

Standing up and showing up as an ally

It means educating my clients and myself.

decolonization and questioning the assumptions that Eurocentric values/customs/ideals are the only "right" ones

Heritage

Learning

What does Reconciliation mean to you (in your personal life) and your work?

to be acknowledged and heard

Building relationships

Truth, the hard truth

Living heritage

Relearning what I grew up absorbing in racist SK

Being an active ally

Journey of Learning and Unlearning

Making an effort to learn about Indigenous cultures.

What does Reconciliation mean to you (in your personal life) and your work?

Acceptance

learn from others and know the differences among one another

Rethinking history

looking for the truth in history

acknowledging mistakes

recognition of rights, respect and partnership.

Reality

Learning about the history and taking actions

What does Reconciliation mean to you (in your personal life) and your work?

Learning about Indigenous culture

recognizing that Indigenous people are the stewards of the land we live in

BUILDING TRUST, HELP
INCLUSION

Keeping culture alive

Wrong's done have been acknowledge, apologies made, and the party (or parties) who caused harm are actively working to make that right. There is tangible evidence of change for the better compassion and understanding

for personal, it means acknowledging the history of how I got here (European descent) and the ongoing impacts of colonization which have benefited me.

Making things better!

What does Reconciliation mean to you (in your personal life) and your work?

Seeking truth

Showing respect

Reconciliation means recognizing conflicts existed, and trying to resolve or acknowledge everyone's viewpoints

calls to action

efforts towards harmony

Understanding each other's perspectives

building a new relationship with other people(culturally differentiated, values, beliefs etc) based on recognition of rights, respects etc

Personally, it's a time to look back and learn from the history, as a Chinese originally, we always value the history, especially for the mistakes those people made. At the work, it's an opportunity

What does Reconciliation mean to you (in your personal life) and your work?

keeping culture alive

Attempts to raise awareness.

Recognize historical and ongoing harms and working to make things right.

Taking the time to hear everyone's voice and provide equal treatment regardless of differences

Cultural and heritage

Acknowledging a wrong and making ammends

To me, reconciliation means acknowledging past mistakes and working toward healing and mutual understanding. In my personal life, it involves recognizing differences, fostering open communication, and